

According to the Leading Activity Indicator, Experian Business Strategies' short-term industry forecasting model, robust but steady growth is likely to continue over the next quarter. The measure is forecast to stand firm at 58 for the remainder of the year. The current strength of order levels and tender enquiries is instrumental to our projection and reflects respondents' optimism about the future.

If this projection proves correct, 2006 is likely to have seen expansion for the 13th year in a row.

The indices discussed here use a base level of 50. Above that level shows an increase, below that, a decrease.

residential non-residential civil engineering

