

Figure 5. The flow pattern which can develop in a mixing ventilation system in which cold inflowing air descends from a series of roof stacks and mixes and dilutes prior to reaching the floor of the space, while a series of localised heat sources produce upflowing plumes of warm air which mix with interior air in upflowing plumes. There is an outflow of warm interior air which matches the inflow of cold exterior air