

Time please!

What you need to know about practical completion and extensions of time

Contract administrators endure the burden of deciding when completion has occurred on projects, who is liable for any delay and the extent of extensions of time to be awarded. Decisions on time are a onerous responsibility and a common source of aggravation and disputes.

We invite you to our London breakfast seminar on Tuesday 21 April 2009, where we will clear up the confusion surrounding time within construction contracts and dispel some of the common myths.

This seminar is specifically aimed at contract administrators but will be of particular interest to employers, lawyers and contractors.

The seminar will cover:

- when can a project be considered practically or substantially complete?
- how do the major standard forms deal with extensions of time?
- what are the techniques for assessing extensions of time?
- tips and hints to avoid time related disputes

Speakers

Tim Tapper

Director, head of dispute resolution and contract advice

Graham Glassey

Associate Director, expert, dispute resolution and contract advice

Martin Greenhalgh

Director, project management

Date

Tuesday 21 April 2009

Agenda

- 08.00 Arrival, coffee and breakfast rolls
- 08.30 Welcome and introduction
- 08.40 Extension of time in the standard form
 - Practical/substantial completion
 - Assessing extension of time
 - Avoiding disputes
- 09.20 Questions
- 09.30 Coffee and networking

Venue

The Geological Society, Burlington House, Piccadilly, London W1J 0BG

RSVP – e: aveshni.kopp@cyriilsweett.com

tel/fax: 020 7061 9282 – Cyril Sweett, 60 Gray's Inn Road, London, WC1X 8AQ